The following users rights and obligations were adopted based on CARNet's network usage and behavior recommendations:

The user has the right to use the computing resources of the Faculty (processor time, working memory, disk space and available software).

The user must comply with all rules and instructions on using computers and report all identified offenses as those made by the user himself and other users to the IT service staff as soon as possible.

User may not conduct prohibited actions, such as:

- Using someone else's account.
- Sharing account with others.
- Modifying the identification data that represents a user in the network, especially such changes that may result in false or incomplete representation of the user in network. It is expressly prohibited to alter first and last name.
- Misrepresentation through the use of network services.
- Use of resources or data that were given to the private use to other users.

As an exception, it is not an offense to use data and resources that the owner declares public.

- Putting information to the public through the use of existing network services without consent of the information owner.
- The use of computational resources beyond the boundaries or in a way that the user is not authorized. If not sure about rights and how to use a resource, the user is required to contact the system engineer.
- Unauthorized use of network services that are password protected or have written warning.
- Network services usage among rules.
- Executing or software installation that interferes with computer operation or changes (can change) the rights of users and available resources.
- Disrupting other users in their work.
- Using the network for distribution of commercial software or software for which there is no consent of the owner or not marked as publicly available.
- The mass distribution of individual messages (eg e - mail , fax servers) without administrator permission.
- Using account for commercial purposes.
- Spreading false information about the network, work rules, CARNet and Member Institutions.
- Distributing or publishing information that are contrary to generally accepted moral standards, and violating privacy or reputation of individuals.
- Distributing or publishing information contrary to the principles of netiquette (Netiquette).
- Giving incorrect or obsolete information in order to achieve the user's rights.

In the case of non-compliance with rights and obligations, the user will be banned to access user account and computing resources at the Faculty. Further measures will be taken according with the regulations of the Faculty and applicable regulations of the Republic of Croatia.
